In summary, the present study suggests that while renal insufficiency predisposes to stroke and a poor outcome after stroke, patients undergoing hemodialysis may have the potential to do as well after stroke as patients with normal renal function. Hence, aggressive therapy and rehabilitation efforts in these patients seem indicated, as well as measures to reduce how long they stay in the hospital.

Accepted for publication August 29, 1997.

Reprints: Joseph Mattana, MD, Division of Nephrology, Long Island Jewish Medical Center, New Hyde Park, NY 11040.

REFERENCES

Correction